FEDERAL BUREAU WILL REDUCE INFANT DEATHS

The bureau of education at Washington, through the home education division, is inaugurating an educational campaign to help reduce infant mortality.

The bureau has obtained thousands of copies of a leaflet called "The Care of the Baby" from the public health service bureau.

To get this into the hands of the people who need it, circulars have been sent out addressed to teachers, club women, trained nurses, physicians and social workers in all parts of the country, asking them to help get this bulletin to every mother in the country. Mothers will be given every help possible in caring for their children.

Horace Waita, 61, 4618 Kenmare av., slashed throat. Hospital.
